Client and architect collaboration key to success at 2019 Victorian Architecture Awards

Winners of the 2019 Victorian Architecture Awards have been announced, honouring the state's leading architecture, with public projects dominating across multiple categories.

Across 14 categories, 66 awards were given including named awards, architecture awards and commendations from 89 shortlisted projects and 248 entries. The winners were announced at a dinner hosted in Melbourne by the Victorian Chapter of the Australian Institute of Architects on Friday 28 June.

The evening's most recognised project was the Parliament of Victoria Members' Annexe by Peter Elliott Architecture + Urban Design, which took home five awards including the prestigious Melbourne Prize and Victorian Architecture Medal, and three named awards across Urban Design, Public Architecture, Sustainable Architecture, as well as a commendation for Heritage.

Rosemary Burne, Jury Chair for Public Architecture and the Chair of Juries for the entire state awards program, believes the Parliament of Victoria Members' Annexe is a clear result of a successful collaborative relationship between a skilled architect, an intelligent client, dedicated consultants and a skilled contractor.

'The project has been thoughtfully conceived from all design aspects – including urban design, heritage, sustainability, interiors and landscape,' says Burne.

'The highly-considered design approach is founded upon a strong commitment by the client to addressing the significance and sensitivity of this project and its context. A confident contribution to public architecture, the Parliament of Victoria Members' Annexe has been executed with long-term decision making at the forefront. This is a legacy project that will serve many generations of Victorians to come.'

The Caulfield to Dandenong level crossing by Cox Architecture, The Club Stand by Bates Smart and Port of Sale by fjmt were also among notable winners this year.

Victorian Chapter President Amy Muir said that the awards are a time for architects to celebrate and reflect on the inherent value that collaboration brings to the process of delivering holistic and compelling outcomes for the evolution of Victoria's built landscape.

‘Successful built outcomes across our cities and regions are the product of collaborative relationships. It’s a team effort between clients, architects, consultants and contractors. Through this, we are able to build sustainable communities and create lasting legacies for our cities and regions,’ says Muir.

‘The awards program provides us with the opportunity to celebrate the exceptional work of our members, recognising those who have demonstrated tenacity and care to deliver meaningful contributions to our evolving state.’

Muir acknowledged that in the current climate Victorian architects more than ever are cognisant of the efforts it takes to deliver notable architecture that can stand the test of time.

‘Regardless of the scale and scope of the project, it is always quality and longevity that determine the extent of the transformative impact architecture can have on people’s lives. Engendering positive social outcomes through architecture is increasingly important for the well-being of our communities,’ adds Muir.

The Enduring Architecture Award, recognising structures over 25 years old that remain important in a contemporary context, was given to Katsalidis Architects for the Melbourne Terrace Apartments, a residential project that spearheaded the apartment boom in the central city area of Melbourne in the early 1990s.

City of Melbourne Lord Mayor Sally Capp, who presented the Enduring Architecture Award, said the awards program recognises the highest standards of architecture and design.

‘These prestigious awards recognise the incredible work that architects do in shaping our cities and our suburbs,’ says the Lord Mayor.

‘This year the City of Melbourne is proud to support the Enduring Architecture Award, which will recognise a development that has stood the test of time. Our built heritage is one of Victoria’s greatest strengths and good quality design is central to maintaining our liveability.’

Projects that received an architecture award or a named award will now progress to compete in the National Architecture Awards program. The shortlist will be announced by the Australian Institute of Architects in the coming months.
