

Architecture creating connections recognised in 2020 Victorian Architecture Awards shortlist

The best of Victoria's architecture, showcasing the immense value architects add when embedded end to end in a project, has been revealed with the release today of the 2020 Victorian Architecture Awards shortlist.

The awards program, run by the Victorian Chapter of the Australian Institute of Architects, features a shortlist recognising architecture in the public realm, residential sector, regional areas, embedded sustainability and much more. Spread across 14 categories, 108 entries have made the shortlist which encompasses 76 individual projects.

Victorian Chapter President Amy Muir says the shortlisted projects define the significant role that quality built outcomes have in creating sustainable, resilient buildings that can endure for generations. The selected projects go beyond the parameters of the brief to deliver compelling results.

'This year's shortlisted projects are exemplars of the outcomes that can be achieved when architects are engaged in the entire process, resulting in a strong collaboration between client, consultants and contracted builders,' said Ms Muir.

'These projects are leading examples of how architects elevate quality through carefully considered outcomes in the building process. The selected projects create a lasting legacy that enable architecture to be accessed more broadly throughout the community.'

'During these strange times we are thrilled to celebrate architecture that continues to challenge the status quo. In doing so, meaningful built outcomes are created that establish strong connections between communities and people.'

Chair of Juries Ingrid Bakker adds, 'The shortlist shows the diversity of Victoria's architecture and particularly focuses on projects that give an architectural response that challenge the design brief and functional requirements.'

Continuing its strong presence is the interior architecture category which this year has the largest shortlist of any category, something Ms Bakker says is timely in the context of the current pandemic.

In response to COVID-19, the Victorian Architecture Awards are going digital in 2020 with Zoom calls to replace site visits and the awards ceremony to be broadcast as a YouTube live stream that will, for the first time, be open to members and the public free of charge.

'Despite the circumstances, it is important for outstanding architecture to be provided with the opportunity to gain recognition, hence the move to an online approach for this year's awards,' says Ms Muir.

‘The construction sector collectively has the potential to help stimulate the economic recovery from Covid-19. Maintaining our unwavering commitment to quality and safety creates lasting community benefits and will ensure that this potential is maximised.’

This year also sees the return of the Bates Smart Award for Architecture in Media recognising media discussion of architecture.

All shortlisted projects have been selected by independent juries. Winners are to be announced at a digital awards ceremony on 10 July 2020 via <https://www.youtube.com/user/AusArchitects>
